Malignant Ovarian Cancer Secondary to The Chronic Use of Mirena Intrauterine Device

Introduction: Malignant ovarian cancer is the fifth most common cause of deaths in women in developed nations. According to traditional Chinese medicine, cancer is formed when the internal energy is reduced and also with formation of internal Fire. The use of highly diluted medications (in this case hormones in the intra-uterine device) can reduce the vital energy of the patient and lead to the formation of internal Fire and have more propensity to develop cancer.

Purpose of this study: is to demonstrate that patients with malignant ovary cancer have energy deficiency inside the five internal massive organs and formation of internal Fire and the use of mirena intrauterine device can induce more energy deficiency (according to Ardent-Shultz Law), predisposing the patient to have more propensity to have cancer, in this case, malignant ovary cancer.

Methods: through one case report of a 42 years-old female patient, that was using intra-uterine device for 10 years without interruption (she used the first for 5 years and the second for 5 more years). She discovered that one ovary had cysts in one specific exam and in the first measurement, she discovered that these cysts was increasing in size and the doctor decided to do the biopsy through video laparoscopy that revealed that was a malignant ovary tumor.

Results: all the internal five massive organs were in the lowest level of energy, rated one out of eight and the treatment consisted in changes in her dietary habit through the teachings of Chinese dietary nutrition, auricular acupuncture with apex ear bloodletting to rebalance the Yin, Yang, Qi and Blood energies and replenish the internal massive organs energy using homeopathy medications according to the theory Constitutional Homeopathy of the Five Elements Based on Traditional Chinese Medicine and crystal-based medications.

Conclusion of this study is to demonstrate that patient with malignant ovary tumor have energy deficiency inside the five internal massive organs and the use of intra-uterine device (that has progesterone hormones, considered highly concentrated medications), will reduce even more this vital energy and increase the chance to develop malignant tumor inside the patients' body, in this case, the patient develops malignant ovary tumor. More studies need to be done in this field studying a greater number of patients will be necessary to confirm these results showed in this article.
